

Friends of Maxx presents:

Fall/Winter 2013
Patch Collection

About Maxx's Patches:

Maxx always liked to make her clothes unique. After teaching herself to screen print she thought other people probably liked to decorate their clothes too and so the patch idea was born.

Eco-conscious creating has always been important at Friends of Maxx. Anything that can be saved from a landfill usually is, even if it makes for a messy studio. Once the idea for the patches came along, Maxx reached out to some local designers about scrap fabric they couldn't use. As it turned out they had quite a bit, which means every patch is made from fabric that would otherwise be garbage. All inks used are water-based, which prevents pollution when extra ink is washed off of the screen.

How is a patch made? Much like a t-shirt. Maxx creates each design by hand on the screen. It takes longer than more popular methods but she swears it looks best for the small designs. Once a screen is done each patch is individually printed, dried and heat-pressed for maximum longevity of the design. The patches are just as durable as a printed t-shirt and the water-based inks won't crack like some plastic-based ones.

Patches are always packaged professionally and ready to hang with prices and design labeled. They are a great way to rescue holey clothes or to create a unique look for something plain.

The patches in this catalog are currently available as of 11/01/2013, however, Maxx is always coming up with new designs. You can access her Etsy site: maxxartandcraft.etsy.com and use the coupon code WHOLESALEPATCH for new designs between seasonal catalogs.
